

In regard to proposed rulemaking with the Telephone Consumer Protection Act of 1991, I am in favor of requiring that telemarketing companies ONLY call individuals enrolled in a national "you may call me" database. It is unacceptable for individuals to have to opt out and be entered in a "do not call" database, although this is preferable to no option at all. A national "do not call" list would be a major improvement to the largely voluntary company specific do not call lists.

Furthermore, penalties should be increased for any telemarketer that does not follow laws regulating the practice. In short, I am in favor of maximum privacy options for the individual as opposed to increase profit margins for any business or organization.

Thank-you
Thomas Brook